Things that are not figures

A sidebar sets out a short note in a box beside the text of the page.
It holds whole sentences of prose and so it is read as text and not drawn.
Each of its lines has many words, which no label of a chart ever has.
A reader would take the box for a callout and the lines for body text.

Closing paragraph after a rule.